

Megan Lindeman is a transdisciplinary artist whose background is in painting. Her work is rooted in a visual investigation that aims to join the tangible with the intangible and is often informed by other fields of study such as neuroscience, linguistics, and world history. She earned her BFA (2003) from Rhode Island School of Design where she studied Painting and Art History. She earned her MFA (2008) from Claremont Graduate University. Her work has been exhibited locally and internationally, and she has lectured on her work at UCLA Art/Sci Center and published art writings that have appeared in the NY Art Book Fair at The Museum of Modern Art in New York. In 2008 she co-founded an artist-run contemporary art gallery in Los Angeles where she curated exhibitions of painting, sculpture, photography, video, and performance art until 2013. She joined Norco College as Adjunct Faculty in 2014 and became full-time Assistant Professor of Art in 2017.
